LENNOX AND ADDINGTON S. S. ASSOCIATION

The County Sunday School Association of Lennox and Addington, met in the 38th annual convention in the White church, Morven, on Friday, Sept. 17th, under the presidency of A. MacGregor, Esq., of Napanee. In the absence of Mr. Halpenny at the morning session, Rev. R. C. Tait, pastor of the church, rose to the occasion by giving a suggestive address on the problem of the teen age boy. This was followed by an interesting discussion on the ups and downs of Sunday school work in general. In the afternoon Rev. T. A. Halpenny, general superintendent of the Ontario Religious Education Council, described the purpose and work of the organization which supervises and directs the educational efforts of all the evangelical churches through their Sunday schools and young peoples societies. He laid particular stress on the necessity of these counties sending at least 150 delegates to the Provincial Sunday Congress to be held in Belleville, October 26-28, at which 12 specialists in the different departments of S. S. work, drawn from the different Protestant churches, will train and enthuse our workers for leadership. As the superintendents of the various departments of the county organization gave the reports, it became evident that while many of them had endeavored to lead our schools to a higher standard of efficiency, they had not always met with loyal support on the part of the local superintendents. Mr. A. C. Hudgins spoke on the place of music in the school, showing the importance of creating an atmosphere of reverence for worship throughout the school session.

The President gave a thought-provoking address on the theme "Work and Prosper," which he pointed out the true standards by which to judge success. Watch for this address in the "Leader." In the evening the choir of Grace Church, Napanee, under the leadership of Paul took charge of the song service and also contributed two appropriate musical numbers during the session. Mr. Halpenny in his evening address endeavored to inspire every officer and teacher to put in their best into the biggest industry in the universe—that of bringing out the latent possibilities of every boy or womanhood lying dormant in every child. [illegible] our christian homes [illegible] assistance [illegible] Sunday schools [illegible] Epworth League [illegible] Forces of Evil. The Treasurer reported that although $200.00 had been this year's levy, there would be a balance on hand if all pledges were fulfilled. The convention gave hearty expression of their appreciation of the painstaking labors of the President and the Secretary. The Morven ladies entertained the delegates right royally. The church was well filled in the evening. While the attendance during the day was not as large, those present represented the cream of our religious leaders in the counties. The day's deliberations might be summed up in the recognition of three great needs—personal experience, thorough training, continuous faithfulness.

IT IS VERY NECESSARY THAT THE TOWN SHOULD OWN THE WATER POWER

FOR WATERWORKS SECURITY

Most people agree that the town should own the Waterworks plant, but some few are not so sure about the purchase of the canal and adjoining land, because they do not understand it.

Let us describe the property. It consists of the canal and water power, a strip of land ten feet wide along the north bank of the canal, then all the land south of the canal to the river, beginning with the land on which Dafoe's old mill was situated, and including Jeffers' land to the falls; it also includes all the land across the river where the old Craig mill also Joy's mill stood. You will better understand the full extent of this property if you will examine the blue print in the window of The Robinson Co. store, ou will find the property outlined in red ink.

This property belonged to the Cartwright estate, was sold to the Seymour Power Co. and by them to the Hydro Power Commission. They are anxious to sell the whole block and have offered it to the town for $15,000. This is a big bargain from a business standpoint just as it stands. It pays a little over 10 per cent on the investment. There are several business men who have told us that they will gladly take it over as a business proposition, if the town does not want it—that it is a vastly greater value to the town than to anyone else; because 1st—If the town owns the Waterworks it would be a great mistake for them not to control the source of their cheap water power.

2nd—If the Corporation does not buy it there will always be trouble about the water power, and the price the waterworks will have to pay for the power and the rent of the property.

3rd—There is space along the canal sufficient for a number of small industries to be located, and that is what the town has always been short of.

4th—The finest natural park site in this part of Ontario is included in this property.

The by-laws are good, sound business propositions, endorsed by the best business men of the town. One is as necessary as the other, and the carrying of each by-law is essential to the

NAPANEE BOARD OF COMMERCE

The provisional Executive of the Napanee Board of Commerce met on Monday evening, Sept. 20th, in the Town Council Chamber.

Present—T. F. Wallace, J. W. Robinson, P. Emerson, R. R. White, D. B. Wilson, W. S. Herrington, and G. P. Carr.

The draft of the Constitution and By-Laws which are to be submitted to the annual meeting was approved.

After the routine business of the meeting was disposed of the members were addressed by the Mayor, J. E. Robinson, in connection with the Waterworks By-Laws that are to be submitted to the property owners on the 4th prox. He was pleased to see very clearly that it will be of very great benefit to the town to own and control its own waterworks system, and further, the By-Law authorizing the purchase of the property now owned by the Hydro-Electric Commission, aside from the fact that it will prove to be a revenue producer, is most vital to the town as it guarantees to the town the control of the water supply and the power generated from the canal.

The surplus revenue of the Waterworks Co. for the past year, after deducting operating expenses, was shown to be over $2,200, which will be increased this year by approximately $1,600. The surplus revenue that will be produced by the property now owned by the Hydro-Electric Commission, besides providing a beautiful park for the town, and guaranteeing the citizens control of their available water power, will be $400. This latter revenue is capable of being increased as there is a considerable amount of power now running to waste that could be utilized for small industries.

After a thorough discussion, in which it was shown that the acquisition of both these properties would cost the ratepayers, except to the present taxes, it was "Moved by W. S. Herrington, seconded by Mr. D. B. Wilson, and carried unanimously: Resolved that in the opinion of the Executive of the Napanee Board of Commerce the two By-Laws which are to be submitted to the ratepayers on the 4th Oct. for the purchase of the Waterworks and the Hydro-Electric property along the canal are steps in the right direction and should be supported by all ratepayers as good business propositions."

—o—

A call from the Dalhousie Presbyterian charge in favor of Rev. J. T. Caswell, Tamworth, was presented to presbytery of Lanark and Renfrew. The call was largely signed, promised a stipend of $1,600, free use of manse and holidays. Mr. Easton, Perth, Mr. Paul, of St. James, and Mr. Scott, of Watson's Corners, supported the call. It was accepted and provisional arrangements made for induction.

Guarding Crown Jewels.

The crown jewels are no longer in the Tower of London. They have been removed to one of the vaults beneath the Bank of England to be cleaned, says Pearson's Weekly.

Even there, however, they could hardly be safer than when reposing at their ordinary home in the Wakefield Tower, where, as most people are aware, they are kept inside an octagonal glass case, enclosed by a sort of steel cage.

Case and cage look commonplace enough. The bars of the latter are quite slender, and the glass is the ordinary shop window kind. Nevertheless it would go hard with anybody who tried to tamper with them.

For each of these innocent looking steel bars is connected with a series of electric burglar alarms, and the slightest attempt to tamper with them would set alarm bells clanging all over the tower.

At the same instant a hidden screen of tempered steel concealed in the upper part of the structure would descend at a run, so that in a few seconds the jewels would be automatically enclosed in what is, to all intents and purposes, a gigantic eight-sided steel safe.

At the same instant of time all the occupants of the level room would find themselves imprisoned therein by the mechanical closing of the doors, and the outer gates of the tower would also clang to automatically.

Tin

Nickel coins, which the Government is credited with thinking of introducing, have never passed current officially in England, though Charles II. with a view to encouraging the Cornish tin industry, at one time started to mint coins of this latter metal.

He made a beginning with tin farthings, which, however, had a small stud of copper through the centre to prevent their being counterfeited. They were rather pretty coins, but the public did not take to them, and they were withdrawn.

James II. afterwards coined halfpennies, as well as farthings, of tin; and very large numbers of similar coins were put into circulation in the reign of William and Mary, owing to the scarcity and consequent high price of copper.

They bore the inscription "Numismorum Famulus" — the servant of the coinage—to show that they were intended as merely temporary pieces.

By the way, we still have "bawbees," although sixty years have elapsed since the last copper coin was minted. Up to 1860 the penny actually was a copper coin, rather large and cumbersome one at that; but in the year following bronze was substituted for copper, with great profit to the Mint, for the life of a bronze penny is ten times that of one made of copper.—Pearson's Weekly.

Wouldn't Admit He Was Alive.

There lives in Toronto to-day a man, like Mark Twain, whose the report of his death was "greatly exaggerated." Arthur Field, 84 Howard Park avenue, was a Cobalt pioneer, who later hit the trail for far-off Alaska. When the war broke out he hastened home to fight for his native land and served with distinction in the English gas corps. After 344 days of continuous fighting in France he was so severely gassed that the doctors accounted him dead and sent his identification disc to England. He recovered and although he made several personal visits to the War Office he was unable to convince them he was still alive and they maintain to this day that he is dead—officially and in the service records reported him dead and that settles it, so far as they are concerned. Field, however, refuses to die.

High Salaries.

Canada's Prime Minister is to receive $15,000 per year and members of the Cabinet $10,000. President Wilson is paid $75,000, the Vice-President $12,000, and U. S. Cabinet members $12,000 each, but as they do not sit in the House of Commons or rainus the $4,000 indemnity which the Canadian Premier and Cabinets Ministers will get in addition to the salaries mentioned. In other words, Canada's Cabinet members will be paid $2,000 per annum more than those of the United States.

NEW BONDS OF EMPIRE

Important Experiment Predicted by Lord Desborough.

President of British Chambers of Commerce Says That an Imperial Cabinet Will Be Formed in London in the Near Future—Premier Lloyd George Intends to Act Immediately.

TORONTO, Sept. 21.—At the opening session of the ninth Congress of Chambers of Commerce of the British Empire in Convocation Hall on Saturday morning, Lord Desborough, in his Presidential address, sounded a note of warning. Viewing the situation in Europe, he said, "at times one almost thinks that law, order, liberty and civilization are leaving it."

This was not a gloomy foreboding, but an indication of what was necessary and should follow. "The chief chance of progress," he continued, "if progress is to be, seems to be in the mighty English-speaking nations combining together to lead the world into saner courses."

Such a declaration of fundamental policy was the more pregnant. The delegates assembled in Toronto, representing Chambers of Commerce and Boards of Trade from the Empire, and men not given to snap decisions or flambuoyant oratory. They speak truths heated in the fire of sincerity and forged on the anvil of experience. To a former Congress the Right Hon. H. H. Asquith said: "Their deliberations have had the greatest weight with those who are called upon to guide the destines of the various parts of the Empire."

Undoubtedly this important utterance forecast made by Lord Desborough, President of the Congress, in his address on Saturday, was the result of the War Cabinet, which was composed of representatives of the Governments of Great Britain and the overseas Dominions. It would be formed an Imperial Cabinet, and that a conference would shortly be called by Lloyd George to determine its constitution.

The last preceding congress was held in London in 1912, which was opened by the then Prime Minister, Mr. Asquith.

Reviewing what had been accomplished at that time, Lord Desborough said the congress made a strong stand against the Declaration of London. He himself brought the matter before the House of Lords, and a three days' debate ensued. That organized opposition strengthened the House of Lords in throwing out the Naval Bill, which by which the Declaration of London depended, after the House of Commons had passed the bill.

"The Declaration of London was never ratified. Had it been ratified and observed our fleet would have been crippled in the war, blockade would have been impossible, and after the war the decisions of our prize courts, which have always held such a high place in the estimation of the world for their independence, integrity and justice, would have been subject to revision by a court drawn from a heterogeneous list of peoples, many of whom had never [illegible] of which act decided. The result of this would have been chaos at the present moment."

It was significant, he added, that the resolution embodying these principles was moved by the Hague Conference by Baron Marschal von Bieberstein on behalf of the German Government. While the judges of the High Court of Appeal were to be appointed by such nations as Argentine, Colombia, Turkey, Paraguay, Bolivia, Roumania, Persia, Honduras, Costa Rica, Hayti, Guatemala, Bulgaria, Montenegro, Nicaragua, Cuba, Honduras, Ecuador, and states with time countries as Switzerland and Luxembourg," he remarked, with sarcasm, "the British Dominions, though they had one-sixth of the carrying trade of the world, had no voice at all. I can only say, long may we be preserved from sea law made in Germany!"

In 1912 the congress reaffirmed its resolution in favor of preferential trade within the Empire, and it ought to be noted that the Imperial Government had since declared its acceptance of the principle, and to a limited extent had applied it to war budgets, while the Dominions further extended preferences they had voluntarily accorded.

The strong protest also made against the principle of a double income tax which had been levied, has been followed up with meetings and interviews, and, while the matter had been partially adjusted, he hoped it would be satisfactorily dealt with as soon as economic conditions would permit.

Dealing with the composition of the congress, Lord Desborough said it was composed of chambers throughout the Empire, which join hand and feel other, and, strictly speaking, the congress in Toronto was the first one held under the new rules. The abandonment of the arrangements to hold the congress in 1915 led to a business conference being called in London in June, 1916, at which Sir George Foster and other members of the Canadian Trade Commission participated. Among the resolutions passed on that occasion was one "in favor of strictly reciprocal trading between all parts of the British Empire; of reciprocal trading between the British Empire and allied countries; of the favorable treatment of neutral countries, and of restraining by tariffs and otherwise trade relations with enemy countries, especially with regard to key industries, so as to render a return to pre-war conditions impossible." The conclusions arrived at were, generally speaking, with those reached at the Economic Conference of the allies in 1916, but it was appreciated that by the time the war ended the situation was considerably modified by the existence of other countries into the alliance, and by the larger adoption of the economic weapon in various directions, and by the enforcement of a rigorous blockade.

New York Police Are Completely at Sea.

So Far They Have Not Made Any Arrests In Connection With Wall Street Outrage—Edwin P. Fischer Goes Back From Canada to Tell Why He Predicted Violence.

NEW YORK, Sept. 21.—No round-up of extreme radicals as a result of Thursday's Wall Street explosion is contemplated, William J. Flynn, chief of the Department of Justice Bureau of Investigation, reiterated yesterday afternoon.

Agents of the Department of Justice, however, have traced the origin of the wagon which carried the explosive to New Jersey. It is now established that the explosive was brought across the Hudson river by ferry.

Where the trail in New Jersey leads, Mr. Flynn would not say, but inasmuch as the principal munitions centres are known to be Passaic and Paterson, it is more than likely that police and federal investigators will concentrate on revolutionary headquarters in those cities.

Mr. Flynn said that the Department of Justice men were running down every possible clue with great care. The clue provided by the blacksmith at Morris Heights is considered the mysterious explosive wagon is considered the hottest, and a great corps of operatives is combing New Jersey, Flynn said, to have in their hands the first definite information concerning the explosive which was used. It understood that the Justice Department which is now examining into this phase of the matter with great diligence has hit upon important clues in the case. Connection. The police are following it up with speed.

The theory is that the Fire Department which has charge of the enforcement of the law requiring all users of explosives to keep tally of the amount on hand and amount used, has been looking into the records of users and has discovered a discrepancy.

The belief that the thirty-third victim of the explosion, the only one not yet identified, was one of the plotters of the conspiracy, is gaining greater credence hourly. Medical Examiner Norris said Sunday that the fact that the face of the last victim is comparatively untouched is a substance to this belief. Other victims with faces almost entirely obliterated were readily identified by relatives.

There is a theory that the victim was a stranger in the city, or a person entirely without relatives. Dr. Norris said the victim was apparently from 18 to 20 years old. Death was caused by a chunk of metal entering the left side of the body.

The body of the young man was well muscled. This fact, together with the calloused palms and the greasy finger nail indicate that he was a laborer. All clothing was missing when the body was picked up. Even the shoes had been [illegible] self-confessed author of warning postcards predicting the bomb outrage in Wall Street, left Hamilton, Ont., for New York Sunday afternoon in the company of New York Detectives Irving O'Hara and James McCarthy. On Saturday Fischer left Canada as a sane man, though on Friday he had been adjudged otherwise by the local lunacy commission. Fischer asked to be permitted to return to New York without the stigma of insanity, declaring that he was going to New York to try to the New York Grand Jury. He was confident that his explanation that he got his knowledge of the plot "from the air," in a telepathic despatch would be believed.

Fischer's departure followed a series of conferences between F. B. Sloan, his solicitor; Magistrate Jelfs, the New York detectives and the United States and Canadian Immigration authorities.

MURDERED FOUR PEOPLE.

Killing Done In Fit of Demented Rage.

HALIFAX, N.S., Sept. 21.—In a fit of demented rage, resulting from a long-standing dispute as to the location of a mill dam on or near his father's property at Hemford, Lunenburg county, Havelock Veinott, Sunday morning at that place shot and killed three men, including his father, and also wounded a fourth and suicided.

The victims of the tragedy are Mr. and Mrs. Archibald Ritchie, Abner Snyder and William Veinott, father of the murderer.

The father was the first attacked, but was not mortally wounded and fled to give warning to the others. He failed to get warning or protection to them in time and the son, having killed the Ritchies at their house and Snyder at his, returned to his father's house, shot the latter dead and then went out into the barn and put a bullet through his own head.

The villagers of Hemford for some time had considered Havelock Veinott an unbalanced man. He had on several occasions, in connection with the dispute over the mill dam site, threatened the lives of the three men who are dead, but his threats were never taken seriously.

Mr. Wigmore was opposed by Dr. A. E. Emery, Liberal, of St. John, and Mr. McCurdy by Capt. Hugh Jackson, also a Unionist, but a United Farmer-Labor candidate.

Hon. Mr. Wigmore's majority was 4,191, and Hon. Mr. McCurdy's was 1,500.

MAY SEIZE COAL PITS.

Communists of Scotland Threaten to Take Action.

LONDON, Sept. 21.— Extraordinary activities are circulated throughout Lanarkshire to the effect that the leaders of the Scottish Communist movement have planned a sensational coup to be sprung at Blantyre, eight miles southeast of Glasgow, says a despatch to the Westminster Gazette from Hamilton, Scotland.

It is asserted that the cashiers and cashpaids almost similar in tone that seizure of the coal pits is imminent and that it is proposed to establish a Soviet system of mining controls. One such adds, "The authorities are not satisfied of the rumors, for they are not unmindful of the undercurrent at work."

All despatches from France have agreed that Millerand could have the Presidency if he desired it, but until now he has steadfastly refused to allow his name to be put forward.

Hon. Robert Beaven Dead.

VICTORIA, B.C., Sept. 21.— Hon. Robert Beaven, former Premier of British Columbia, for nearly twenty years a leading figure in the political life of this province, and one of the most energetic mayors of Victoria, is dead at his home here at the age of 84 years.

Robert Beaven was born at Leigh, Staffordshire, England, and was educated at Upper Canada College, Toronto. He was a member of the early B.C. administration of the 70's and was Premier from 1882 to 1883. He was Mayor of Victoria for the years 1892, 1893 and 1895.

POLES STILL ADVANCE.

Bolshevist Armies Driven Back on Wide Front.

WARSAW, Sept. 21.—Along 200-kilometer front (124 miles) from Kovel to Halics, the Poles are pushing eastward. This territory extends from the Bug to the Dniester. Along the road from Kovel to Rovno the River Styr has been attained, Rovno being entered last Friday. In this district the Poles are extending their frontier further south with the support of Ukrainian cavalry. Having crossed the Dniester they were able to turn both along the east banks of the tributaries of the Dniester, branching off at Halicz.

Ukrainia has about 10,000 cavalrymen operating on her section of the front. This operation before Lemberg is closing the head waters of the line by any Bolshevist aggression and preparing the way for further operations in the south. The Poles are in opposition but it did not compare with that shown in previous fighting. Indeed, the Red army was so thoroughly demoralized that the inhabitants were able to start a small insurrection before the Poles advanced.

There are indications that the Russian country districts are beyond the reach of the Red extraordinary commission and are ready for a wave of anti-Sovietism, but the rule of force is still too strong to warrant hope for the overthrow of the Reds in the heart of Russia. In this advance the Poles are supported by the large Jewish population which had found Bolshevism not quite so fine as it had thought at first.

In the north the Poles are beginning another advance which has as its probable objective the Foch line originally occupied by the Supreme Council to separate the armies of Poland and Lithuania. In the action against the Foch line was brought into prepared for defence and the Poles will now be saved the labor of digging in.

TURKEY IS HELPLESS.

Troops Are Being Slowly Withdrawn By the Allies.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Sept. 21.— The Allies are slowly withdrawing their forces from Turkey, the British regiments being sent to Mesopotamia and India and the French to Syria. The British effectives have been reduced to four Indian and four British battalions and the French to six battalions garrisoned on the European side.

Its inability to deal with the Kemalists weighs heavily on the Turkish Government which is now seriously considering the fear that it may lose Constantinople. The Greeks are unwilling to sacrifice more men in fighting the Nationalists unless the Allies make it worth their while and they openly declare that their price is Constantinople. With this possibility in view the Turkish Government is transporting to a place of security the secret archives and at the same time is desperately attempting to compromise with the Kemalists.

The plan for a military expedition against Constantinople has been abandoned definitely at present, it is learned, as soon as they leave the barracks. The Turkish Treasury is empty. In August the officials were paid with money borrowed from the War orphan fund; which is collected from public buildings. On September 20 the telephone company disconnected the War Ministry from the exchange because of the non-payment of $10,000 in telephone fees since last year.

CATTLE MARKETS

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

TORONTO, Sept. 21.—With 3,500 cattle on sale yesterday, the general opinion of the opening among the salesmen was that cattle would run a little bigger than last week, but this opinion did not materialize. The market might be quoted just about steady, in keeping with the light supply.

The quality of the cattle was generally inferior. There was a fair demand for choice and good butchers, but for all other grades trade was slow.

The offerings were pretty well cleaned up at the close. Breezy feeders will sell at steady prices. For good milch cows and springers a better trade was created. The bull market shows no change.

The prospects, as far as can be judged, are for steady prices for good cattle, but for the common class (and there are a lot of them coming), it will be as though the prices will be lower.

Secured by the West India Trade Agreement and Canadian Ships.

By willingness and ability to provide ships, Canada this year has drawn the West Indies closer to herself and to the Empire. She can make preferential trade agreements with other peoples under the British Flag, without arousing international complications.

Canada possesses men with brains who will make these preferential trade agreements. But to make good these trade agreements we must have Canadian Ships.

THE MODERN GYPSY.

The "Model" Seen In Our Dominion In 1920.

If George Borrow were alive to-day what keen delight he would take in writing about the gypsy caravan, 1920 model! No longer do the tribes of Romany go about in horse-drawn wagons, covered, and concealing in their mysterious depths numbers of stolen children — at least, so most youngsters are taught to believe. And horse trading, once the chief business of these nomads, has given place to a much more modern traffic.

Not quickly did the gypsies quit their horses and wagons. For years after the automobile became popular their quaint caravans might be seen on country roads or city streets, unchanged. But now Romany is become motorized.

To see a modern caravan, composed of several cars of varying sizes, ages and models, go hurrying through a city street, with perhaps a truck or two to carry the tents and more bulky possessions, is to realize that after all these centuries the hand of modern civilization has at last been laid upon these mysterious people.

They ride in automobiles in a fashion all their own. Ten or fifteen pile into a five-passenger model with much personal baggage and with little regard for the conventions. What does it matter if a few legs and arms project over the sides or if a head sticks through the rear curtain here and there?

All the guile learned in years of swapping horses, that most guileful of all occupations, has been brought over into trading automobiles, and the same member of the tribe who used to paint the old white horse chocolate color, plump out the hollows in his flanks with some black magic and fill him with two-year-old spirits by dosing him with something now prohibited by the Eighteenth Amendment, now puts temporary patches on worn out tires, doctors old motors until they run with power and with rare skill converts antiquated cars into seemingly youthful and handsome vehicles.

What a effect this complete change of living is to have upon the lives of these ancient peoples, who have kept voluntarily aloof from civilization so many centuries and remain untouched by it, cannot be forecast as yet. The women have not abandoned the festive, colorful garb of Romany for motor togs, and the men steadfastly refuse to dress in any of the accepted fashions for motorists.

There are as many children as ever, too, and dogs, no longer able to keep up afoot, ride in state in the cars, along with children and other live stock.

MASTER CROOKS.

Are Responsible for Crime Epidemic In England.

Whose are the master minds behind the astounding epidemic of crime which has recently startled London? Jewel robberies and fur thefts on an unexampled scale have been reported to Scotland Yard during the last three or four weeks, and the smartest minds of the criminal investigation department are baffled by the facility and ease with which successive coups have been accomplished.

It is women who are playing an important role in connection with these uncanny mysteries of the west end, remarks the London Express. The ultra-fashionable woman thief has come into her kingdom, and Scotland Yard is becoming more and more mystified at the extraordinary success which attends her daily enterprises.

The war infused a new spirit of adventure, daring and resourcefulness into the woman crook, and things which in former times she hesitated to attempt are now mere commonplaces in her daily life.

What manner of creature is the woman crook of Mayfair? She is not the petty pickpocket, the purse snatcher, of whom one reads in the police court reports; on the contrary, she is a cultivated, accomplished, traveled adventuress, a woman of affairs, who dreams no dreams, but deals in hard facts. You would never guess these women adventurers for what they are.

Take a peep with me into one of the many fashionable Mayfair flats, where live the genuine women of fashion—and the spurious. A well gowned woman is sitting on a comfortable sofa warming her silk-clad feet before a fire. The walls of the room are hung with fine old prints, the brocade curtains, the carpets, the lacquer writing desk, all savor of the refined, cultured society woman. And the woman herself. To look at her you would think she was sitting there planning a dinner party or a week-end visit. As a matter of fact she is working out in that quick brain of hers the details of one of the most daring jewel robberies ever foisted on a great city.

A knock at the door. A man servant ushers in a well-groomed young man, and retires. The two sit chatting comfortably together on the sofa, for all the world like brother and sister. By and by the woman rises, adjusts her cloak, which the man holds out for her, and rings a bell. "My car." Down the steps, past the silent footman, into the glittering landaulette, and—off into the whirl of traffic. Where are they bound? Maybe it is to some west end restaurant, perhaps to the dark alleys and streets of Limehouse Chinatown.

They watch the doings of the big thieves and the little, the master crook and the petty purse snatcher, and bring their reports daily to the master brain. Hence your cracksman is always posted with details—he knows who is planning fur robberies, and who has money in diamonds, who would fich motor-cars, and who will receive stolen goods. She knows. That is the great danger and those whom she watches realise this to the full. Blackmail is a handy weapon to the woman with the master mind. She has but to choose her victim—it is hers. If it is refused? Well, there is that little matter of the theft of a pearl necklace.

Not even the most astute investigator at Scotland Yard is at times aware of the superwoman crook, for she trades under a variety of aliases, while her manner of living disarms suspicion.

THIS WOMAN'S RECOVERY

Shows Remarkable Curative Power of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Chesley, Ont.—"Before using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I was a total wreck. I had terrible pains in my sides and was not regular. Finally I got so weak I could not go up stairs without stopping by just how far up the steps. I tried two doctors but they did me no good. I saw your medicine advertised in the newspapers and thought I would give it a trial. I took four bottles of the Vegetable Compound and was restored to health. I am married, am the mother of two children, and do all my housework, milk eight cows, and do a hired man's work and enjoy the best of health. I know Vegetable Compound a great help for my weak back before my babies were born. I recommend it to all my friends who are in need of medicine, and you may print this letter if you wish."—Mrs. HENRY JANKE, R. R. No. 4, Chesley, Ontario.

It hardly seems possible that there is a woman in this country who will continue to suffer without giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial after all the evidence that is continually being published, proving beyond contradiction that this grand old medicine has relieved more suffering among women than any other medicine in the world.

A Canadian Saint.

The canonization of Joan of Arc has been completed, and she is now a saint. A patient investigation has been carried on for forty-five years and has ended in the complete vindication of the Maid of Orleans and the conceding to her of the divine powers which French tradition ascribed to her.

It is reported from Rome that Canada is soon to have her first saint—Ste. Marguerite of Canada. As far back as 1878 proceedings were first taken towards the canonization of Marguerite Bourgeoys, who was born at Noyes, in France, in 1620, but as a young girl came out to Canada, founded the Ladies of the Congregation of Notre Dame, and died at the age of 80, in the year 1700. She spent her long life as a teacher, partly with the French settlers, but mostly with the Indians, and in the face of raids, fire, pestilence and famine gave the most devoted service. There is no finer story anywhere than Parkman's account of such devoted lives as hers. In Canada and the United States 131 churches and schools have been named after this woman, and she is soon to be canonized by her church and will be the first resident of this continent to achieve the honor of sainthood.

Confusion In Time.

"Arriving nine o'clock Saturday," says the telegram. But there are nine o'clocks in Saturday, one in the morning and the other at night. Time as it is used now is confusing. That's why England is trying out a twenty-four-hour clock in Greenwich. If it is adopted it will do away with the confusing a.m.'s and p.m's.

Clock faces will be enlarged to accommodate the twenty-four hour marks and the usual Roman numerals will very likely disappear, Arabic numerals taking their places.

When thirteen o'clock will represent the day or night time and o'clock of old has not been announced.

Don't Sell Thin Chickens.

There is absolutely no excuse for selling young chickens from the farm within as some people do. The amount of corn that will make a pound of pork will also make a pound of chicken that is always worth considerably more than the former.

A Purse of Gold.

Rev. James Cumberland, for forty years pastor of the Presbyterian churches, Amherst Island, was on Saturday presented with a purse of gold and an address by members of the two congregations he served so faithfully and so well on the occasion of his retirement from the active ministry. Mr. Cumberland's successor has not yet been named. Mr. Cumberland has taken a residence in Kingston and will remove to his new home as soon as he hands over his charge.

Tweed Athletic Association.

The formation of an athletic association in Tweed is under discussion. The idea is to foster and encourage all kinds of athletic sports, and it is felt that this can best be done by one governing body instead of an executive for each branch as has had to shoulder too much responsibility, and very often their efforts were but poorly appreciated. With all the interests pooled, more interest and enthusiasm would be stirred up.

The Passing of Mrs. Shibley.

Agnes Hamm, wife of Geo. W. Shibley and eldest daughter of Ebenezer Hamm and Caroline Fraser, passed away suddenly at her home in Woodstock, Ont., on Sept. 17, 1920, at 5.15 p.m. Death was due to cerebral hemmorhage and other long endured complications. Mrs. Shibley was taken ill August 6th. On August 10th, (day before her seventy-second birthday) she was taken to Woodstock hospital, where she received professional care. On Sept. 13th Mrs. Shibley was brought home, where she received loving care (for so short a time) from her grand-daughter, who has lived with the deceased since the death of her mother, who was the only daughter of Mrs. Shibley. Mrs. Cowan died twenty-four years ago this month at her parents' home, Palace Road. Mrs. Shibley showed promise of improvement up until the time of her death, when she suddenly turned for the worse. Her family had hopes of her being able to get about the house this winter, but she could not withstand the pain and the end came unexpectedly. Mrs. Shibley was a woman of immense activity. "Energy" was the keynote to her wonderful capacity of "doing many things well." She never shirked or faltered her numerous responsibilities. With great courage and christian fortitude she braved the many and successful turmoils of her life. She was of United Empire Loyalist descent, and grand-daughter of the late Capt. Fraser, of Old Fort Henry, Kingston. Mrs. Shibley was born on the farm where Mr. Wesley Cummings now lives. She was a faithful wife, a noble, devoted mother, a loving, wise grandmother and most sacrificial in helping others. She was heroic, but quiet, benevolent and very kind, a great blessing to the sick, a strong christian character. One cannot estimate her worth upon this earth for "Her price was far above rubies." "Endurance was one of her chief characteristics." The Mrs. Shibley celebrated her golden wedding last December with the members of her family and truly she was then as always a blessing among them. She was a life-long reader of the "Express." A short service was conducted last Friday evening by Rev. Wilfrid Gaetz, pastor of Central Church, Woodstock, which Mrs. Shibley attended. The remains were brought to Napanee last Saturday morning by her husband and grand-daughter. The funeral was held at the residence of her brother, Bailey Hamm, Morven, at 2 p.m., last Sunday. Interment was made in the family plot at Wilton by the remains of Mrs. Shibley's late daughter, Mabel Shibley Cowan. Services were conducted by Rev. Dr. Shorey, an old friend of the deceased, assisted by Rev. R. C. Tait, Morven. Many relatives and friends gathered to pay their last respects to the one who was so highly esteemed. "Safe in the Arms of Jesus" and "Nearer My God to Thee" were sung and were among Mrs. Shibley's favorite hymns. 14th chapter of John was read and was her favorite chapter. Those surviving are her husband, two sons, viz., Morley Hamm Shibley, Woodstock, Jacob Adelbert (Bert) of Toronto, three grand-children, Mrs. S. P. Hagerman, Belleville, Irene Cowan, Woodstock, and Jack Shibley, Toronto.

The Late Dr. T. W. Beeman.

Condensed from the Perth Courier. After a period of thirty years as a prominent citizen and practising physician of Perth, Dr. Thomas W. Beeman passed to his long rest on thursday, Sept. 9th, after an illness of over a year, from dropsy. He was in his 62nd year, and was born at Selby, in the County of Lennox, and after his early education there and at Newburgh, studied medicine at Queen's University, from which institution he graduated. After a brief practise at Selby he came to Perth, and twenty-two years ago married Miss Mary R. Shaw, of this town, who, with one son, Thomas Russell, survive. The funeral took place on Saturday morning, 11th inst., to St. James' Church, where the service was conducted by the Rev. Darcy Clayton, after which the body was given burial at Elwood Cemetery. The pallbearers were Messrs. E. D. Hart, C. J. Sewell, Frank Hutchinson, P. J. C. Caedonnell, W. A. Moore and Dr. A. W. Dwyre.

Citizenship.

The day of franchise petitions, and campaigning in the interests of votes for women has passed, and we stand to-day as full fledged citizens. I wonder how many recognize the responsibility that comes to us with the ballot, not first in the use of it, but the responsibility to educate ourselves as to an intelligent use of it ? It is rather significant that the first ballot that Ontario women exercised should be on the referendum—significant because the women who have worked longest and hardest for woman suffrage have been the members of the W.C.T.U. Now that we have gained that for which we worked, let it be ours to make ourselves acquainted with the duties and work of citizenship, and show ourselves capable of discharging them in a manner that will be for the highest good of the community in which we live, as well as our country as a whole. The Society have secured a capable speaker, in the person of Mrs. Gordon Wright, to give a talk along those lines in the near future.

Vote in favor of the two By-Laws on Monday, October 4th, and give the town a boost ahead.

DREAMS WITH TRAGIC ENDS.

Sleepwalkers Have Changed Visions Into Realities.

The recent death of a prisoner in his cell as the result of a dream was by no means an isolated instance of the dream fatality. There have been cases where a dream has proved fatal, not merely to the dreamer, but to one who happened to be near him at the time of the dream, says Answers.

Such was the case of Robert Hendrey, the Yorkshire solicitor, whose dream led him to inflict serious injuries to his guest. This guest, who was an old school friend, was staying with Hendrey, and one night the two became deeply involved in an intricate legal argument.

After much discussion, the host out-argued his friend, who seemed to be rather settled at his defeat. During the night the host dreamed that his friend, angry at having been beaten in argument, came to his room and attacked him. He actually "felt" his friend's hands round his throat.

He sprang out of bed, but found the room empty. Believing his guest had run away, he seized a walking stick from a corner, rushed to his guest's room, and, in a fit of anger, belabored him so badly that he died from his injuries.

In another instance a householder dreamed that a burglar was in the house. He woke up, and, aware that he had been dreaming, got out of bed, listened, heard soft movements downstairs, and crept down with an unloaded revolver.

In the darkness at the foot of the stairs somebody blundered into him. He struck out with the revolver—and blinded for life his brother, who had returned late, and was trying to get to bed without disturbing the household.

A London chemist once dreamed vividly that he had swallowed some poison. In a haste of panic he went into the shop and hurriedly took an emetic. This, of course, poisoned him. When he began to feel the effects he realised that he had made a mistake, and immediately swallowed another emetic to counteract the first one. But he was too late; he died the next day.

Sitting half asleep in a train one hot day, an acquaintance of the writer somehow gained the impression that the train had stopped at his station. He sprang up, opened the door, and fell on the permanent way. He was taken home, only about thirty miles an hour. He was badly injured, and will be lame for the rest of his life.

All these cases were due to the inability of the dreamer to distinguish between dream and reality. There are many people from this failing is a source of continual annoyance and often danger. Most children are victims of it, but seldom to such a degree as to endanger their lives.

A famous instance was that of Charles Darwin, the scientist, who, as a boy, was continually in hot water for telling his parents stories of happenings that he really believed he himself had witnessed.

England's Cotton Supply.

Cotton plays a great part in the lives of men in England and in the United States, says the Nation's Business. Even if the these later times cotton has been more of a hand-maiden than a king, it has recently turned out a very haughty sort of handmaiden and inclined to be exceedingly self-assertive.

Two years ago England took note of such possibilities and has since had a committee that points out that the world is short in cotton, if needs are measured by the capacity of prewar machinery, and the shortage is increasing; that the shortage is greatest in the kinds of cotton that go into the finest kinds of cloth; that England is getting 85 per cent. of its cotton from the United States, which each year uses more of its own crop; and that the British Empire can itself with profit produce the cotton it needs. Egypt the Soudan, Uganda and India are parts of the empire, in which, according to the committee, cotton growing can be greatly extended.

It seems the committee believes that to extend cotton growing in the British Empire it will need funds—something like $500,000 a year. This amount it proposes to raise by levying a tax of 12 cents on each bale of raw cotton imported into England.

Three Great War Secrets Have Been Made Public To Astonish the World

A WRITER in the London Daily Mail says:

Although the depth charge was the most powerful of the weapons that checked the operations of the U-boat, thus leading indirectly to the collapse of the Central Powers, I imagine that not more than ten people in every thousand would be able to explain just what a depth charge is. Jack Tar himself, who knows most things, could not tell you how and where it came to be constructed.

Manchester University did, in fact, make the first depth charge. It would be inaccurate to say it was invented by us; like the tank, the depth charge is nobody's child. But we can honestly claim that it was our Engineering Department which experimentally developed the first depth charge to the commercial stage.

It was one of the many odd problems set us by the Admiralty. They asked us for a 15-in. bomb-thrower which would project a weight of one hundredweight a distance of 500 yards by compressed air. We accomplished it. They asked us for a shackle which would stand a pull of one ton and melt after being immersed in the water for a certain length of time.

It was a novel request, and probably the Admiralty thought they had set us a poser. The object was to discover a contrivance which would shackle a mine and its sinker together on the bed of the sea until a mine-laying submarine had dropped all its "eggs," when, with the melting of the shackle, each mine would rise to the determined height.

We solved that particular problem with a sugar shackle — by pouring melted toffee into a cavity dove-tailed in a metal shackle! It was so devised that it could stand a pull of one ton and a third during the forty-five minutes that the sugar took to melt.

After the first year of war several men from our laboratory took up responsible positions in H.M.S. Vernon, the navy's research department at Portsmouth, and it was through the Vernon that the investigations into the question of how to conquer the U-boat first came back to the Engineering Department at the university.

Two alternative designs of mechanism causing a heavy charge to explode at a fixed depth under water were sent to us for criticism, modification and experiment, and, after some months of patient experimenting, we were able to hand over to the university instrument-maker the final design from which under our supervision, the first fifty depth charges were made.

Our aim was to produce a simple mechanism, thoroughly fool-proof, which would go off at the pressure at which it was set. The depth charge consisted of a case containing 300 pounds of T.N.T. (tri-nitro-toluol) with an attached mechanism provided with a flexible diaphragm and a piston which depressed a spring in such a way that the spring was compressed in proportion to the depth below the surface of the sea. By a simple arrangement worked by a lever on the outside of the depth charge the amount of compression required to fire the charge could be adjusted to suit any depth—in practice one spring was released at forty, a second at eighty feet.

The firing gear was so arranged that a trigger was released when the spring was compressed by the amount corresponding to the desired depth. The trigger fired a detonator; the detonator exploded the T.N.T., and—that was the end of the U-boat.

The Decimal Coinage System.

Despite the manifold disadvantages of the present system, enumerated by the many witnesses examined, the British royal commission decimal coinage has recently reported that it is not advisable, at present, to put the coinage system upon a decimal basis. Though the present pound-shilling-pence system is hard to learn, difficult to figure with, and a serious handicap to the export trade, the commission feels that the difficulties of reform would be insurmountable. Millions of industrial contracts would have to be altered, in the first place. Then, to replace the present coins with new would require the whole normal output of the mint for thirteen years, no allowance being made for increased production. If one-half of the output were devoted to replacement, and the other half to meeting current demands, this confusing transition would take more than twice as long.

Area of Our Country.

Canada is Britain's largest overseas Dominion.

Canada is 3,500 miles by 1,400 in area. U. S.-Canada boundary line 3,000 miles long; 1,600 by land, 1,400 through water.

Canada is bounded by three oceans; its 13,000 miles of coast line is nearly equal to half circumference of earth.

Canada has one-third of area of British Empire, and is as large as 30. United Kingdoms and 18 Germanys; twice the size of British India; almost as large as Europe; 18 times the size of France, and 33 of Italy.

Canada is larger in area than the United States, including Alaska, by 111,992 square miles (Canada 3,729,665; United States and Alaska, 3,617,673).

Canada's land area (within provinces), 1,401,000,000 acres, 31 per cent., or 440,000,000, is fit for cultivation; only 110,000,000 acres occupied, and 34,000,000 acres under cultivation.

Up-to-date Kittens.

The other day the little daughter of a Salem household was watching a family of small kittens at their first meal of chicken bones. She was somewhat shy at having to eat before an audience, and first one little kitten would come up and get one little chicken bone and retire to a corner of the arbor to eat, and then another little kitten would slip up for its choice and run off with it to his own particular place. The child watched them for a long while and then she came running into the house. "Mother," she said, "do you know what we are doing? We are running a cateria out here instead of a cafeteria. Just come and see!"

DRUG CLERK PUTS TANLAC TO TEST

"Three Bottles Put Me In Splendid Health", Says Herbert Knapton.

"Tanlac has been of such benefit to me that I feel it my duty to make the facts known to everybody," said Herbert Knapton, well-known drug clerk of 15 Epworth Ave., London, Ontario.

"As the result of an accident about three years ago I was laid up and had to stay in the house for seven weeks. I got in a very run-down condition and my blood was out of order for I broke out in pimples all over my arms. My stomach was also upset and I had to go on special diet because of indigestion. I frequently had to take medicine for constipation and had so much neuralgic pains in my shoulder that I could get no rest at night without taking a sedative to induce sleep.

"I must confess that I did not think that Tanlac could help me, but a personal friend of mine was so benefitted by it that I gave it a trial. I was both surprised and gratified by the results. It quickly gave me an excellent appetite and so improved my digestion so that I could eat whatever I pleased without suffering any bad after effects. It relieved my constipation, purified my blood and the pimples disappeared. I haven't had an ache or a pain in my body now for some time and I finished the third bottle of Tanlac I have enjoyed splendid health. I've been praising and recommending Tanlac ever since as a most excellent medicine."

Tanlac is sold in Napanee at WALLACE'S Drug Store, in Camden East by R. J. OSTER, in Wagarville by S. JACKSON. (advt.)

A BEAUTY SPOT.

Niagara-on-the-Lake a Link to the Past.

There is one small corner of Ontario, and one of the oldest corners at that, which seems to have been left like an isolated island in the midst of a great sea, in which the tides of life flow in ever-increasing volume east, west, north and south, but where these tides leave the island itself untouched.

This little spot is Niagara-on-the-Lake, the place where the first Parliament of the province assembled, and where every foot of land is historic ground. Buildings a century and more old, standing in spaces occupied by June foliage, ancient graveyards, even the French thorns on the common and by the river bank tell of the past—of the Indian who was here before the white man came, of the adventurous voyageur and empire builder, of the thin stream of immigrants who crossed the Niagara river after the Thirteen Colonies had ceased to be; of Brock and Laura Secord.

The story is all of the past. The marvellous changes and developments of the last fifty years have left this old place almost as serene and quiet as was Acadie in the time of Evangeline.

"A calm profound. Low in the West
With dying beams the setting sun
Kisses the dim horizon lingeringly
A last good night. Within the river's breast
The shadows lengthen, while the very air,
Perfumed with subtle essences
Of new-mown hay and jessamine,
Doth seem to sleep.

On the beach
The drowsy murmur of the stream
Serves but to mark the silence—
God's gift to man, sent in his deep compassion
To rest his soul!"

Even the occasional locomotive whistle is softened by the overhanging branches of elm and maple. The boom of the sunset gun and the "last post" of the bugle at the fort across the river are mellowed by the distance covered by the span of slow-moving water. Such occasional sounds are as powerless to disturb the calm of a century as they are to make the sleepers in the churchyards. Here is one real haven of rest, of quiet—of beauty unspoiled by man.

But all this will change. The harnessing and double harnessing of Niagara power; location near the point of convergence of a continent-wide network of railways; situation alongside the coming prolongation of ocean navigation to the head-waters of Lake Superior, will some day make the whole Niagara frontier one of the world's greatest industrial centres. The forces of nature directed by man will break down this barrier of silence and rest. But before that day comes it is good to have one more look at the place as it still is with its reminders of the curling smoke of the wigwam, the canoes of the fur traders and the silent heroism of the pioneers who entered the dark shadows of the woods skirting the river bank to hew out homes in the wilderness which once covered what is now the Keystone Province of the Canadian Confederation.—W. House of Surprises.

In a dingy London by-way there is a public-house which displays no sign, serves only one drink to a customer every half-hour, and has equally quaint rules of its own, says Tit Bits.

Near Liverpool Street Station is a small alley known as Artillery Lane, containing this house of surprises. Of three persons questioned in the alley only one knew where it was, and then its name was unknown.

Years ago—in 1686, when it had the first license — it was probably familiar as the Ship, but to-day it is known only to a few by the name of its proprietor.

There is only one bar, and it is useless for customers to return for a second drink before twenty-nine minutes are up, for the barmen have been trained to a wonderful pitch of facial memory. That is the first surprise.

Another is the landlord. Instead of being greeted by a gigantic personage, as one might perhaps imagine, Mr. Lionel Williams, silver-haired and diamond-pinned, is introduced. His appearance is that of an eminent literary character.

Perhaps the biggest surprise of all is when the ever-watchful barman orders you to take your cigarette out of your mouth, as "no smoking is allowed here."

STORING THE VEGETABLE CROP.

The vegetable crop has been an abundant one in most places in Canada this year, and many persons will have a large quantity to store. It is important that care be taken in storing so that losses will be reduced to a minimum.

Potatoes should be dry when stored and where possible, as where the temperature will not go above 40 degrees F or below 32 degrees. In order that the surface of the potatoes can be kept dry and in the best condition to avoid rotting, provision should be made for air to pass underneath and through them. If they are stored in considerable or large quantities such provision is made keeping the potatoes about six inches off the floor by first putting down a slatted temporary floor with the boards just close enough so the potatoes will not fall through, and a similar slatted temporary wall a few inches from the permanent wall would permit a still freer circulation of air. Keeping them in crate-like boxes with openings between the boards or tops and sides is a good method.

Beets, parsnips, carrots, salsify, and turnips keep best under conditions somewhat similar to potatoes, though it is not so important to keep them dry. Injuries to the vegetables in cellar they are liable to become too dry and lose their firmness. If there is danger of this they may be kept in boxes and covered with a sack kept wet. In a warm cellar they will grow.

Onions are very liable to rot unless kept in a dry place. Keep them spread out as thinly as possible. Where quantities are small, an attic room where there is no frost will be found a good place to store them.

Cabbage will soon wilt in a warm, dry cellar. Keep them outside as long as possible by protecting them with leaves, straw or soil. If they begin to crack before it is time to pull them, loosen them in the ground by twisting the plant and thus checking the growth. When stored where the air is very dry they keep better with the roots and stems left on, and wrapping each head in a newspaper will prevent wilting to some extent.

Celery is left outside until danger of severe frosts. To keep well in storage it needs a moderately dry, well ventilated, cool cellar for best results. The celery should be planted in the cellar in rows very close together in sand or light soil, separating each row with a lath or other piece of wood to keep the tops somewhat apart and better to ensure a circulation of air. The soil should be kept moist but the tops dry. Avoid wetting the leaves and stalks if watering is necessary.

To store green tomatoes to ripen them put in closed boxes or drawers where they will be in the dark and in a moderately warm place.

DICK WHITTINGTON.

He Was a Popular Lord Mayor of London.

The fascinating tale of Dick Whittington and his cat has some basis in fact. The chronicler of "Old and New London" assures us that, although we must perhaps dispense with Puss, if we look too carefully through the pages of history we may at least believe that Dick Whittington, running away from his master tradesman in London, was stopped by the sound of the Bow Bells which seemed to be saying to him, "Turn again, Whittington, thrice Lord Mayor of London," which is after all the best part of the story. Richard Whittington really was Lord Mayor of London, not thrice but four times, having risen to this elevation after marrying his master's daughter and amassing a huge fortune.

Whittington seems to have been an exceptionally popular mayor. His justice and patriotism were proverbial among the people of the city, while his generosity made him the most favored subject of King Henry V., who Whittington released from a debt of 60,000 pounds.

Lord mayors of those early days—the fourteenth century—were not always so popular, either with their sovereign or with the people of the city. Since the time of the first mayor of London, appointed by Richard I. in 1189, who was a draper, the post was held by a long line of drapers, fishmongers, butchers and the like. Such democratic persons did very well in early years when the post was merely a city off but when in the reign of the next head of the title of "Lord" was tendered to the mayor of the city, the merchants who assumed the post on the election of the people were not always found to be quite worthy of the social eminence of the nobility.

The lord mayor became the recipient of all sorts of high traditional honors and rights which have been sustained up to the present time. Within the old city of London, the lord mayor takes precedence next to the sovereign even before princes of the blood royal. The Lord Mayor's Show or Pageant, which occurs every year on November 9, is one of the most celebrated holidays of the city. The newly-elected mayor and his lady ride in a state coach which looks as if it had dropped bodily out of a fairy-tale, and which is followed by a procession of floats and costumed personages representing the most dramatic events and the most happy traditions of the picturesque old city.

Even in modern times there is nothing modern except the new appointee himself in the ceremonies of the day. It is a practical enthroning of the fortunate citizens now Lord and Lady, who rule, between the Mansion House and the Guildhall, with all the traditional state of a mediæval king and queen.

The rite of conferring the "freedom of the city" has been practiced from time immemorial by the lord mayor, and has been administered for many a worthy personage, not only native Englishmen but distinguished foreigners. But what it signifies is a bit vague, but as an honor it has attached to it just as serious importance to-day as it ever had.

"And now, if you'll forgive me for talking your arm off and if you'll prove it by letting me help you, I'll promise never to kiss you or try to till—till you ask me to."

"And May I Arrange for You to Meet Reben?"

Daphne laughed refreshedly at his impudence, and he laughed, as well as he might. And they shook hands with comradeship.

"And may I arrange for you to meet Reben?"

"I hate to ask you now. I've no right to trouble you. But I'm terribly anxious to get a job."

"And I'm terribly anxious to get you one."

"You're awfully kind," she said, and led him to the telephone.

She felt that it would be indelicate to listen, and went back into the living room of the apartment. There Duane joined her in a few moments with the terrifying news that Reben had said that he might have a chance to place her at once if she could come to his office without delay.

Opportunity bouncing out at her like a jack-in-the-box alarmed her. But she faced it pluckily. She put on her hat with trembling hands and went down in the elevator with Duane.

They went up in an elevator at one side of the lobby of the theater and stepped out at Reben's office door. A number of somber and despondent persons of a theatrical complexion were waiting there also, the wretched Lazaruses of art.

Duane spoke to a respectful office boy, who disappeared through a door and returned to beckon him in. With heart bounding high and bubbling at her throat Daphne entered the theatrical world by one of its most gilded portals.

The great Reben sat bulkily behind an ornate table-desk and dismissed a still more ornate stenographer with a nod as he rose to greet Duane.

Duane did the honors: "Mr. Reben, I want to present you to Miss Kip. Miss Daphne Kip."

Reben greeted her with suavity and his eyes were even more enthusiastic than his words. Daphne was at her superlative degree and anxiety gave her a wistfulness that was appealing to Reben. Women's charms and wistfulnesses made up a large part of his wares in trade.

"Have you had any experience?"

"None."

"Studied elocution?"

"Never. I never spoke a piece in my life."

"Good! Amateur theatricals?"

"Never. I never seemed to care for them."

"Better yet! What makes you think you want to act now?"

"Money. I want to earn money—get rich."

"I see," said Reben, and fell into a profound meditation, studying Daphne searchingly.

Duane seized the opportunity to rise and say: "Well, I'll leave you two together to talk terms. It would be indelicate for me to know just how rich Miss Kip is going to be."

He had no sooner gone than Reben's manner changed slightly and Daphne's courage vanished. Reben paced the floor as he talked. His path kept slowly closing in around her like the walls in Poe's story.

"You look like Miss Kemble," he said. "You have somewhat the same temperament. You like her style of play. That may be your line. I can't tell. Of course I don't know how well you can act. Perhaps you never could. Kemble is great, but she comes of an old theatrical family. Of course you have one great capital—your beauty; for you are very beautiful, Miss Kip, very. Let me see your eyes."

He had a right to ask if he were going to hire her eyes, but she looked up cravenly, for the burly satrap was leaning over her. His left hand was on the arm of the chair, his right on the back of it. His left hand was gradually enveloping hers. It was a fat, hot hand, and his face was so close that it was blurred in her vision.

Then she remembered Duane's words. She controlled herself enough to put them to the test.

She pretended to look coldly into Reben's face, and she said, with a brave show of calm: "Mr. Reben, I didn't come here to flirt with you and I don't intend to. I came here for a job as an actress. If this sort of thing is a necessary part of the job I'll go somewhere else."

Reben backed away and stared at her. He was rendered foolish by her rebuff and he stammered, "Why, I—I meant no harm."

She went on with the Duane system of treatment: "I know you didn't. You meant to be polite, but you don't have to be so polite to me. I don't expect it and I don't like it."

"All right, all right!" Reben growled, pacing the floor again, but in a constantly receding path. He did not speak. He felt that he had made a fool of himself, and he was embarrassed.

Daphne was so frightened with her success that she got to her feet, saying: "I suppose this means that you don't want me to work for you. It's true, then, what they say about the stage."

"Nonsense! Of course not! Rot! I never see most of my people except at rehearsals or performances. I've never spoken to three-quarters of 'em. If you want a job you can have it, and no concessions are necessary. You don't have to make love to me. You make love to the audience, and if you can capture that you can slap my face every time you see me."

Daphne was astounded. She was engaged! She was exultant and thrilled with gratitude to Duane for introducing her to this marvelous opportunity and for the wisdom of his counsel.

Reben said: "The general understudy of the Kemble company has grown tired of waiting for a chance to appear in public. She's quitting me this week for a small part in a road company. You can have her place if you want it. Do you?"

"You bet—er—indeed I do. How often does an understudy play?"

"As rarely as possible."

Daphne's joy turned to lead.

Reben added: "But we don't pay by performances. I'll pay you twenty-five a week. You wanted money. There's a little of it for a start. Do you want it?"

"Will it lead to anything better?"

"It might."

"Am I to understudy Miss Kemble?"

"Yes, and all the other women roles."

"And when do you suppose I'll get a chance to play Miss Kemble's part? Soon?"

"Never, I hope."

"That's encouraging!"

"If Miss Kemble fell ill we'd ordinarily refund the money, because she's the star. But sometimes we might have to give a performance at short notice. Chances in the other parts might come any day."

"And you'll give me a better chance when you can?"

"Indeed I will. If you have the gift, the sooner I find it out and the harder I work it the more money I make. The more you earn the more I make. I'd like to pay you ten thousand a week."

"I'd like to have you. All right, I'll try."

He pressed a button on his desk once, then twice. The office boy appeared, followed by the stenographer. Reben said to the boy: "Is Mr. Batterson here? Send him to me." To the stenographer he said: "Fill out a contract for Miss Kip—Miss— What's the first name? Miss Daphne Kip. Salary, twenty-five. Make it a three-year contract."

Reben motioned her absently to her chair and said, rather for Duane's sake than for hers, she felt: "Sit down, won't you, till the contracts come? and pardon me if I—"

He finished the phrase by the deed. The office routine went on and Daphne might have been the chair she sat in, for all the attention he paid her. She felt rather ungalantly ignored. Still, she had asked to be treated on a business basis. He was taking her at her word.

Before the contracts were ready Mr. Batterson appeared. He was one of Reben's stage managers, a worried, emotional little man, worn to shreds with his task of stimulating and correcting the emotions by which others earned their wages and fame.

Reben introduced him to Daphne and explained her new office. Batterson seemed none too well pleased with the news that Daphne was ignorant of stage work to the last degree. He had found it hard enough to make the experienced actors read their lines as they must be read and keep on reading them so. To teach this dramatic infant how to walk and talk was an unwelcome labor.

He took Daphne into his office and pulled out a set of parts. When she stumbled over them he cast his eyes heavenward in his swift impatience. He explained them with a vinegary gentleness. He talked to her of the canons of interpretation. He walked through her scenes and spoke her lines for her again and again and yet again. But somehow he could not teach her.

He tried everything but beating her. He flattered her, wheedled her, parodied, satirized, rebuked her, and occasionally he cursed her. She did not rebel even against his profanity, because she had no confidence in herself to support her resistance. She felt that she was far worse than he said she was when he said she was worst. She used all her funds of resolution in keeping from throwing down the part and running away in tears. She had none left for asserting her right to politeness.

Once Daphne was out in the street again and released from the ordeal of pleasing Batterson, youth and ambition brought hope back again. Broadway at twilight was athrob with enthusiasm and she caught zest from the crowds. She was going home to study, carrying her little set of textbooks like a schoolgirl. But she felt the wings of conquest fledging at her ankles or the wheel of fortune spinning under her toes.

Her very first effort had succeeded. She was a woman with a salary. She would be no longer a parasite on any man. She had a career and a business as well as the best of them.

Her mother was at home alone. Lelia had gone from that tea party to another to which Mrs. Kip was not invited. Daphne's mother greeted her with relief. She told her news with a gush of enthusiasm. It left Mrs. Kip cold, very cold.

She was a pious, church-going woman, Mrs. Kip. She had always looked upon the theater as a training school for the still lower regions. She went to plays occasionally, but usually with a feeling of dissipation and worldliness. Besides it was one thing to see plays and another to act them.

Daphne tried to reason her mother out of her backwoods prejudices, but she only frightened her the more. Mrs. Kip retired to her room to write a long urgent telegram to her husband demanding that he come on at once and rescue his child. She always called on him in an emergency and he always responded.

Lelia came home eventually full of gossip and triumph. Her Dutilh gowns had made a tremendous success; the other women wanted to murder her.

Mrs. Kip broke in on her chronicles with the dismal announcement of Daphne's new insanity. Lelia was almost as bitter in opposition as Mrs. Kip had been, but from quite another motive. Lelia had artistocratic impulses and looked forward to social splendors. She would gain no help from the fact that her husband's sister was a theatrical struggler.

Daphne escaped an odious battle with her by referring to the need of close study, and retreated into her own room, locking her mother out.

She stayed there, repeating her lines over and over and trying to remember the action that went with them as Miss Kemble had played it. She had a quick memory, but the intonation of the lines gave her extraordinary difficulty.

She remembered one of Miss Kemble's most delicious effects. She came on the stage unannounced and, pausing in the doorway, smiled whimsically and said, "How do you do?" That was all—just "How do you do?" But she uttered it so deliciously that a ripple of joy ran through the audience. Daphne tried to master the trick of it, but with no success. She said "How do you do?" in dozens of ways, with no result except to render the phrases meaningless gibberish.

Daphne flung down the part she was studying and flung away ambition, and went out to tell the family that she agreed with them.

She was confronted by Lelia in a role of despair. Bayard had telephoned that he could not get home for dinner. He would not be home in time to take Lelia to the theater as he had promised.

Lelia was in a frenzy. She had nothing to do but wait for her man to come and take her somewhere. Daphne understood the tragedy of the modern wife: dowered with freedom, pampered with amusements, deprived of the blessing of toil, unaccustomed to seraglian torpor, she must yet wait on the whims or necessities of her husband.

Daphne reconsidered her decisions. Better all the difficulties and heartaches of the actress-trade than this prison loafing of wifely existence. She had something to do.

CHAPTER X.

The next day Batterson telephoned her that he had called a rehearsal with the company. Daphne went to the theater in terror. The stage looked utterly forlorn with the actors and actresses standing about in their street clothes. Under the bright lights with the people made up and the audience in full bloom, like a vast garden, there would be impersonality and stimulation; but the present scene was as doleful as the funeral of an unpopular man.

Courage was largely a matter of her superself forcing her reluctant feet forward. A soldier ordered to leave a bombproof shelter for an advance, a playground of shrapnel, has just the struggle with his vaso-motor system that Daphne had with hers.

With the kindliest smile an amiable wolf ever wore Batterson invited the fluttering lamb to come to the stream and drink. Daphne came forward in a trance and heard Batterson say:

"Ladies and gentlemen—Miss Kip, our new understudy. Give her all the help you can."

Miss Kemble had graciously chosen to be present for that purpose, though the result was only to increase Daphne's embarrassment. An imitation in the presence of the living model was a double load to carry.

Miss Kemble went forward to Daphne and took her hand and petted it and said: "I'm so glad to see you. You must meet my aunt, Mrs. Vining. She won't object to your playing her parts, I'm sure."

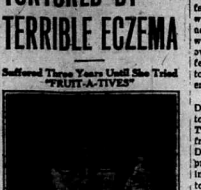
Suffered Three Years Until She Tried "FRUIT-A-TIVES"



DAME PETER LAMARRE

Pointe St. Pierre, P. Q.

"I think it my duty to tell you how much your medicine has done for me. I suffered for three years with terrible Eczema. I consulted several doctors and they did not do me any good.

Then, I used one box of 'Sootha-Salva' and two boxes of 'Fruit-a-tives' and my hands are now clear. The pain is gone and there has been no return. I think it is a marvellous cure because no other medicine did me any good and I tried all the remedies I ever heard of, without benefit until I used 'Sootha-Salva' and 'Fruit-a-tives'.

"Fruit-a-tives" cooled the blood and removed the cause of the disease, and 'Sootha-Salva' completed the cure."

Mrs. Vining, who had played all manner of roles for half a century, and was now established as a famous player of hateful old grandes dames, spared Daphne her ready vinegar and chose to mother her.

Mr. Reben had come down from his office to make up his own mind. He smiled with a kind of challenging cordiality and muttered: "So our little business woman is going to open the shop. Well, all you've got to do is to deliver the goods and I'll buy 'em at your own price."

Batterson rapped on the kitchen table that stood on the apron of the stage under a naked bunch of light of glaring brilliance.

"Places, please, for the entrance. Ready? All right, Eldon!"

The noble matinee idol put his hat on the table, walked on, sat down on a divan composed of two broken chairs and read an imaginary newspaper.

Batterson said: "Doorbell! Buzz-z."

A well-dressed young man, whom Daphne recognized as the elderly butler, knocked and opened an imaginary door between two chairs. This was the cue for Miss Kemble's famous "How do you do?"

Everybody waited and watched for the newcomer to make her debut in the world. Then was a silence. Daphne stood with heels screwed to the floor and tongue glued to the roof of her mouth.

"All right, Miss Kip," said Batterson with amusing patience. "Come on, come on, please!"

Another silence, then Daphne laughed and choked. "I'm awfully stupid. I've forgotten the line."

Batterson gnashed his unlighted cigar and growled: "Howjado! Howjado!"

"Oh, yes! Thank you. I'm so sorry!" said Daphne, and walked on at the wrong side of the clothes.

Everybody shuddered to realize that she had entered through a solid wall. This miracle was ignored, but there was no ignoring the peculiarly inelequent note she struck when she bowed to the butler and stammered:

"How are you?"

A sigh went through the vast profound and void of the empty theater. Instinct told even the echoes that Daphne did not belong and never could belong. Batterson groaned, tragically.

"Not to the butler, please! Don't say 'How are you?' to the butler. Don't say 'How are you?' to anybody, please. Script says 'Howjado?' Say 'Howjado?' to Mr. Eldon there. Say 'Howjado' to Mr. Eldon there."

"How do you do?" said Daphne, bowing to Eldon and speaking with a soullessness of a squeezed doll.

Eldon rose, folded up his imaginary paper, and came forward with a pitying desire to help her. He hoped that the scared little Kip woman would win through the same bitter trials to the same perilous and always endangered success. But he had a fear.

He delivered her his line with benevolent gentleness. He waited, then gave her her line with exquisite tact. She did not repeat it after him. He said to her:

"Don't be afraid; you're all right."

He gave her the line again and she parroted it after him. She leaped then to a speech several minutes farther on. He drew her back to the cue:

"Pardon me, but I think I have a line before that."

The rehearsal blundered on. It was not Daphne's fright that disturbed the rest. It was her complete failure to suggest the character, or any character.

But Batterson found nothing to amuse him, and Reben tasted that dust and ashes of disappointment with which theatrical managers are so familiar when they bite on the Dead sea fruit of beauty without dramatic talent.

Miss Kemble tried to help. She asked Daphne to step aside and watch while she went through the scene, but she was so unnerved that she forgot her own lines and had to refer to the manuscript, while Eldon waited in acute distress and Daphne, looking on, said: "Oh, I see. I think I understand it now." Then she forgot it all again at the repetition. Somehow the rehearsal was worried through to the end and Batterson dismissed the cast pauy with sarcastic thanks. Then he went to Reben to demand a substitute.

Daphne went home, dreading her fate but not knowing what the verdict was. She felt sure that it would be not guilty of dramatic ability. She was worn out with the exposure of her own faults and uncertain which she feared the more—to be dismissed or to be accepted. The latter meant unending trials.

At the elevator she found Tom Duane. He had just telephoned up to the apartment to ask if she were in. There was a welcome flattery in his frank delight. She asked him up. Tom Duane was electric with cheer. He praised Daphne with inoffensive heartiness and insisted on hearing the history of her progress. She gave the worst possible account of her stupidity. He would have none of her self-depreciation.

"Everything's got to begin," he said. "Some of the greatest actors are bad at rehearsal, and never get over it. Some of the greatest actresses always are at their worst on the first performance. You're bound to succeed. You have beauty and charm and grace and magnetism no end. Don't worry. I'll speak to Reben and make him restrain Batterson. We'll make a star of you yet."

There was a fine reassurance in that word "we" in spite of its pleasant tang of impudence. It gave her strength to go to the telephone and call up Reben. She came back in despair and collapsed on the divan.

Tom Duane was at her side instantly. "You're ill! In heaven's name, what can I do?"

His solicitude pleased her. She smiled palely: "Mr. Reben told me he was afraid I'd better give up the job. He was very polite and awfully sorry, but he said he didn't think I was quite suited to the work. He said that later, perhaps, there might be another chance, but—oh—oh—oh!"

She was crying with all her might. Gradually she realized that Duane's hands were on her shoulders. He was squeezing them as if to keep her from sobbing herself to pieces. His face was close to hers, and he was murmuring:

"You poor little thing. You mustn't grieve. You've to fine and too beautiful for such work."

She flung herself free. "No, no; I'm an imbecile—I'm no good—that's all."

Those big hands were at her shoulders again. That soothing voice was plastering courage and praise:

"You are not no good. You shall succeed! I'll make Reben take you back. I've helped Reben out when he was in trouble. I've lent him money that I'll make him give you your chance. I promise that on my word!"

She stared at him through her tears. They blurred him in dancing flashes of light as if he were a sun god. She caught his hands from her shoulders, but she had to hold them in hers. She was drowning, and she must cling to whatever arms stretched down to her. She must not question whose they were till she was safe again on the solid earth.

Duane was laughing now and patting her on the back as if she were a frightened child. She felt no right to rebuke his caresses. They were such as a brother might give a sister. His arm about her was that of a comrade, sustaining another in a battle.

He was the only one in the world who offered her courage and praise and help in her need.

Duane said, with a matter-of-fact briskness: "I'll call Reben up at once. No, I'll go see him."

"But you put me under such obligations. I'm afraid—"

"Never be afraid of an obligation." "I'm afraid I can never repay it."

"Then you're one ahead. But you can repay me and you will."

"How?"

"Let's wait and see. Goodby. Don't worry."

He gave her a hand-grip of perfect good fellowship and went into the hall. She followed him to tell him again how kind he was. As she was clasping his hand again Lelia opened the door with her latchkey.

Now there was triple embarrassment. Tom Duane had paid ardent court to Lelia before she married Bayard. Here he was in Bayard's wife's home, apparently flirting with Bayard's young sister.

Lelia felt all the outraged sentiments of jealousy and all the indignation of a chaperon who has been circumvented. Duane retreated in poor order. Daphne stammered an explanation too brief and muddled to suffice. Then she went to her room.

There her mother found her when she came in later. Daphne had only a faint hope that Duane would work his miracle twice, so she told her mother that she had failed as an actress. She told her bluntly:

"Mamma, I've been fired."

To her comfort her mother caught her to her ample bosom and said: "I'm glad of it. I'm much obliged to whoever is to blame. Not but what you could have succeeded if you had kept at it. But you're too good for such a wicked life. A person couldn't be an actor without being insincere and a pretender, and my little girl is too honest. So now you come along home with me."

"No, thank you, mamma."

Mrs. Kip gathered herself together for a vigorous assault when the telephone rang and the maid brought word that a gent'man wished to speak with Miss Daphne.

It was Duane, and she bruced herself for another blow. But his voice was clarion with success.

"I've seen Reben. It's all right. He's promised to keep you on and give you a chance. He says for you to report at the theater at seven-thirty tonight."

And now again Daphne was more afraid of her success, such as it was, than of her failure. But it was pleasant to carry the news to her mother and Lelia.

It disgusted them both. They were still trying to dissuade her from continuing on the downward path when a telegram from her father came for her mother:

"Taking beaver arrive Grand Central tomorrow don't meet me love.

"WES."

Bayard was late, as usual, and Lelia's temper had just begun to simmer when the doors were opened stiffly and a hand was thrust in. It proffered a small box of jeweler's size and waved it like a flag of truce.

Lelia rushed forward with a cry of delight, seized the packet and then the hand, and drew Bayard into the room and into her arms.

"This is your apology, I suppose," she said.

"Yes, the apology for being late, and that's what made me late."

Lelia was enraptured. She adored gifts and she had the knack of inspiring them. The little square parcel provoked her curiosity. She opened it so excitedly that the contents fell to the floor. She swooped for them and brought up a platinum chain with a delicate plaque of tiny diamonds and pearls on a device of platinum.

Lelia ran to Mrs. Kip and Daphne, exclaiming: "Aren't they beautiful? Aren't they glorious?"

Mrs. Kip and Daphne tried to keep the pace, but once more they could not forget who it was that was raining down gold on this greedy stranger. Their alarm was not diminished when Bayard said to Lelia:

"You're not the only one who can open accounts. I started one for them."

He took from his pocket a pale brochure and said to Lelia: "That allowance we agreed on, you know?"

"Yes, I know."

"Well, instead of paying it to you week by week I decided to open a bank account for you; so I ran over to this bank at the lunch hour and made a deposit to your credit—five hundred dollars!"

Lelia forgot her jewelry for a moment in this new pride. She strutted about with mock hauteur, waving Mrs. Kip and Daphne aside and saying: "Don't speak to me. I am a lady with a bank account."

Mrs. Kip sighed in dreary earnest, "That's more than I ever was."

Children Cry for Fletcher's

CASTORIA

Fletcher's Castoria is strictly a remedy for Infants and Children. Foods are specially prepared for babies. A baby's medicine is even more essential for Baby. Remedies primarily prepared for grown-ups are not interchangeable. It was the need of a remedy for the common ailments of Infants and Children that brought Castoria before the public after years of research, and no claim has been made for it that its use for over 30 years has not proven.

What is CASTORIA?

Castoria is a harmless substitute for Castor Oil, Paregoric, Drops and Soothing Syrups. It is pleasant. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other narcotic substance. Its age is its guarantee. For more than thirty years it has been in constant use for the relief of Constipation, Flatulency, Wind Colic and Diarrhoea; allaying Feverishness arising therefrom, and by regulating the Stomach and Bowels, aids the assimilation of Food; giving healthy and natural sleep. A MOSQUITO SURVEY.

It Is Being Made In British Columbia by Airplane.

At first glance, one wouldn't say that airplanes bore much relation to mosquitoes. But they can be made to, and have been made to, up in the Fraser valley of British Columbia, where there are great areas of low-lying land, undeveloped and ill-drained. Mosquitoes have become a great pest in this region, seriously reducing milk production. The Dominion Government accordingly stationed an expert entomologist there last spring to make a survey on which effective control measures could be based.

Here was where the airplane entered. Eric Hearle, the Government entomologist, had spent days in slow compilation of his mosquito map, a device to show the location of breeding places. He had toiled through marshes, and from mountain tops, with glasses, had taken observations of the country and found them unsatisfactory. Then he decided to try what he could accomplish in an airplane.

Aerial observation proved to be the ideal method. "In ten minutes," declared the Government entomologist, "I made more progress with my map than I had in weeks on the ground." Mr. Hearle took a big map up with him in the airplane, piloted by Lieut. Trim, a war veteran, and as mosquito breeding places were located indicated their position on the map.

British Columbia, by the way, intends to use hydroplanes to perform another important function. Her forests are the most extensive and valuable in Canada, and they cover an undeveloped empire of thousands of square miles. It is proposed to use a hydroplane patrol system during periods of fire danger. Hydroplanes are preferred to land machines in order that inland ponds and lakes may be used as landing places.

INSTRUCT FARM HANDS.

One of the Best Ways of Keeping Good Help Interested.

As a remedy for the shortage of farm help, it is suggested that community centres be established wherein the farmer, his family and the farm help can enjoy sports and games such as do the employes of big commercial concerns in the large cities. Contentment with one's environment is one of the chief factors in making for increased production, be it of the farm or the factory, says C. Forrest Luby, who claims that farmers are facing a critical situation in the existing labor problem. Incidentally he gives Prof. T. G. Atkeson, of the National Grange, as authority for the statement that only one per cent. of the boys who left the farms to join in war service have returned to take up production from the soil; the other ninety-nine per cent. having been attracted to the cities by the many things in the way of recreation and amusements provided in the larger centres of population. It appears that most of these young farmers who enlisted for the war did never before leave from their own home towns, and that travel unsettled them. This might have been expected. But what may also be expected is, that when they have had a few years of city life they will be glad enough to get back to the farm and stay there, even without the attraction of specially provided forms of recreation as an added attraction to country life. In fact, it would appear as though the best preparation for a life on the home farm would be a course of travel—without expense provided, and a little reading would do wonders in making the farm boy contented with his lot; and the game leading to this course of preparation is nowise a liberal education in the schools.

Another factor in providing contentment in help in the farmer who shows a live interest in the well-being of his hired man. The farmer who would keep his help must work with them, make them his equals and encouraging their interest in community undertakings. As a leader-up to community interest, farm interests must come first, however, and the first endeavor of the farmer-employer should be to have his men not only do their work satisfactorily, but also intelligently, and with a view to preparing themselves to become farmers on their own account.

In Canada, where there is land for all who are willing to work intelligently at the producing of crops, there is no need for any industrious farm worker becoming discouraged to think ahead in periods of a few years, and they will be content to stay with the farming game for the sake of the opportunity it affords. As for sports, pastimes, and recreation, these can easily be found on the farm itself or in the community, without special provision being made by a committee appointed for the purpose. Where the members of the community are sufficiently well informed, a leader in local undertakings for entertainment will undoubtedly be found, even among the younger people, and the rest will be willing to follow the leader.

TUBERCULOUS CHICKS

Pullets Having Tuberculosis Are Common in Ontario.

The Disease Chronic Rather Than Acute — Symptoms Described— The Birds Should Be Killed Off and Destroyed.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

TUBERCULOSIS in chickens is very common in Ontario. There is not a county in the Province from which we have not received for examination hens either dead of, or suffering from, this disease. Almost invariably a letter accompanies such birds stating that deaths are occurring in the flock at irregular intervals, the birds usually getting thin and lame before death. The following is a sample letter received:

"Jan. 12, 1920

"Dear Sir.—Will you kindly investigate this fowl and let me know what is the matter and how to treat them. Out of 150 pullets I have lost over a dozen. Some of them went lame on the start, some in right foot and some in left, and some just moped around and died in a few days. I have sold all my old hens and have now 120 pullets and thirty last year's pullets. They started to lay in early fall. Thanking you in advance,

Yours respectfully,

Examination of this pullet showed it to have been suffering from advanced tuberculosis. The liver, spleen and intestines were all badly tubercular. The immediate cause of death had been the rupture of a large blood vessel in the liver due to the development of tubercles.

Tuberculosis results in considerable financial losses to the poultryman, due to decrease in egg production and heavy mortality in the flocks where it is present.

The disease is chronic rather than acute. That is, it does not cause death suddenly, but takes time to develop, usually months. The bird gradually lose flesh, turn pale around head, become listless, mopy, and frequently lame, while egg-laying is reduced to a minimum.

To be sure, however, that such a condition of birds in a flock is due to tuberculosis, examination by one of a post-mortem examination by one of them. The bird should be killed and opened up. If tuberculosis is present, the liver and spleen will be spotted with white or cream-colored spots varying in size from a small pin head to a pea or beans, and in number from a few to thousands. These are the so-called tubercles, each one a mass of dead tissue that has been killed by the action of the poison secreted by the tuberculosis bacteria which have developed there. These tubercles are frequently found on the intestines and in the lungs and bones as well as in the liver and spleen. A microscopic examination of a portion of one of these tubercles will show large numbers of tubercle bacteria present.

These tubercle bacteria are the cause of the disease. They are so small as to be altogether invisible without the use of a high power microscope. They are not the same variety as those which cause tuberculosis in human beings.

Birds suffering from the disease give off large numbers of the bacteria in their droppings. Other birds in the flock scratching around and feeding with such birds pick up the bacteria with their feed and grit and so get infected. The bacteria are absorbed into the system with the food and get circulated in the blood and lymph streams until they get located in the tissues, more particularly the liver and spleen, where they rapidly multiply and secrete their poison. This acts on the tissue immediately around them, causin it to die and turn white and thus become a characteristic tubercle.

When this disease is found in a flock it is advisable to kill off all the birds. Then those birds which on examination do not show evidence of the disease may be used as food. Those that show the disease should be destroyed by burning or by burying deeply in quicklime.

The entire premises in which the birds have been kept should then be well scraped, cleaned and thoroughly disinfected by the application of a disinfectant wash or spray, as quicklime, zenoleum, cresol, etc. The runs should be well covered with quicklime and then ploughed in deeply. Even after such treatment it would be preferable to establish new runs on fresh ground and thus get clear from flocks that are known to be healthy.

Anyone suspecting the disease in a flock and wishing to have the case determined, should send a suspected bird, either alive or dead, express prepaid, to the Bacteriological Department, O. A. C., Guelph, when an examination and report will be made at once. An illustrated bulletin dealing with this disease may be had on application to the Department of Agriculture, Toronto.—Prof. D. H. Jones, O. A. College, Guelph.

Wallop the Weeds.

Do not neglect to cut weeds on roadsides, in fence corners and waste places. And do not allow weeds to go to seed in root crops. Cultivation or hoed crop will rid the field of many weeds, but a neglected weed crop is a nursery for weed and a source of contamination for every field on the farm.

Early after harvest cultivation will destroy many annual weeds and perennial weeds, such as False Flax, Corn Cockle and Wormseed Mustard. Plough shallow immediately after harvest and harrow and cultivate frequently. By shallow ploughing the weed seeds are kept near the surface and by the frequent cultivation of the land they are made to sprout, and having sprouted they are easily destroyed by further cultivation.

Experienced.

Sweeping his long hair back with an impressive gesture, the visitor faced the proprietor of the film studio, according to a current story. "I would like to secure a place in your moving-picture company," he said.

"You are an actor?" asked the film man.

"Yes."

"Had any experience acting without audiences?"

A flicker of sadness shone in the visitor's eyes as he replied, "acting without audiences is what brought me here."

Women of Canada Who Testify

Tillsonburg, Ont.—"Ever since I can remember, Dr. Pierce's medicines were used in our family at home and they never failed to give good results. The 'Golden Medical Discovery' was used as a tonic and blood purifier and for bronchial trouble, and it proved excellent. I have personally taken 'Golden Medical Discovery' for bronchial trouble, and the 'Favorite Prescription' to build me up when I was run-down and they both were very beneficial. Mother always used Dr. Pierce's Compound Extract of Smart-Weed for pain; it also was very good. I feel safe in recommending all of Dr. Pierce's medicines knowing them to be good."—MRS. CLIFFORD MITCHELL.

Central Butte, Sask.—"I have used Dr. Pierce's Medical Discovery for a number of years and am pleased to recommend it as a blood purifier. I know it has no equal as I used it for my boy for tuberculosis of the knee joint. My neighbors and friends were surprised with the results in fact, I do not think he would be alive today had is not been for the 'Medical Discovery.' I also keep it on hand for coughs as it differs so from other cough medicines, instead of upsetting the stomach as most cough syrups do it is good for the stomach. I only wish I had known about Dr. Pierce's medicines sooner."—MRS. PERCY WOOD.

When you take Golden Medical Discovery, you are getting the benefit of the experience of a doctor whose reputation goes all around the earth. Still more, you get a temperance medicine that contains not a drop of alcohol or narcotic of any kind. Long ago Dr. Pierce combined certain valuable vegetable ingredients—without the use of alcohol—so that his remedies always have been strictly temperance medicines.

CLEANLINESS IS BIG ASSET.

Duty of Every Dairy Farmer to See That Output Is Wholesome.

Farmers who produce clean milk possess a business asset of which many do not fully appreciate. The public is better informed, by far, than it was a few years ago regarding the value of pure milk as a food. It knows more of the dangers of unclean milk. Therefore, as a business proposition as well as from a sense of duty, every farmer owning milk cows should see to it that the output is wholesome.

Clean milk benefits not only the consumer but the milk producer as well. Most producers of market milk have experienced the chagrin of having a shipment of milk refused or returned because it reached the market sour, tainted, or otherwise in poor condition. Although such milk may be used for feeding pigs, it usually is a complete loss to the producer, since the cost of transportation back to the farm usually exceeds its value.

Frequently, also, the producer depends on a certain market as an outlet for his milk and has no means for utilizing small quantities at uncertain intervals, even if he had it at the farm. Another important consideration is that unpleasant effect which the receipt of sour, tainted, or otherwise unsalable milk has upon the purchaser. Delivering milk of that kind usually results in the loss of the confidence of the dealer, or, if it is delivered directly to the consumer, the loss of customers.

Clean milk means fewer complaints, a better class of patrons, and a steady market for the product. Carelessly produced and improperly handled milk may be the means of spreading disease. Every member of a dairy herd should consider it his duty to himself and to the community to keep only healthy cows, supply them with wholesome feed, and keep them in clean, comfortable quarters. The milkers and all who handle milk should realize that the slightest discharge a food which is easily contaminated and should take every reasonable precaution to keep it clean.

Fewer Cows In Denmark.

According to the Smor Tidende, there was a reduction in the number of milk cows in Denmark of about 22 per cent. during the year, caused by scarcity of fodder, home-grown and foreign. Since peace was restored in Europe the number has been slowly increasing, but the total increase is estimated to be only some two per cent. This is only 80 per cent. of the number of dairy cows we had in 1914, we are to-day producing the same quantity of butter as in 1914. The smaller quantity of milk has been brought about by the farmers' careful selection of the animals that were good milkers and should be retained for the dairy industry, and the poor milkers were sold for butchering. This policy has brought about the result that the stock of dairy cows in Denmark to-day is the best we ever had.

The production of butter in Denmark has recently been about 4,000 casks weekly; a single week it reached even 45,000 casks. Notwithstanding the reduction of the number of domestic cattle during the years of war, production of butter has at the present moment reached as much as the same quantity as pre-war times, corresponding period of the year.

STORY OF HESSIAN FLY

CAUSED CONSIDERABLE LOSS THIS YEAR.

"Flax Seeds" Change to Two-Winged Flies In August and September— The Maggots Do Considerable Damage, But Deep Ploughing and Late Seeding Help Control Pest.

There has been more loss to winter and spring wheat from Hessian Fly this year than for several years. The most of this loss has been in the southwestern counties of the province, where wheat growing is, as a rule, more general than in the other parts of the province. In these counties some fields were almost ruined; many others, however, escaped with very slight injury. The insect has been present also in the other counties where wheat has been grown this year, but from the accounts received and from personal observation, the loss has, for the most part, not been great; no greater probably than we have had from time to time in the past.

It is not always easy to discover why some fields of wheat have been severely injured, while others, in the same locality, were only lightly attacked. Usually the explanation is that the worst-infested fields were sown earlier than the others; sometimes that wheat had been grown close to these fields last year and the stubble had not been ploughed down the same year, thus allowing flies to breed and attack the new fields; sometimes the wind may have brought flies in from other farms; sometimes the soil in such fields was poor or not well prepared, or the seed was not first class. It is a result that the plants had not good vigor, and so were badly attacked. The Hessian Fly prefers plants lacking in vigor, though, of course, it also attacks healthy plants.

The little brown pupal cases that, when the wheat is ripening, are usually to be found in the fallen stems, either imbedded in the stalk very close to the ground, or hidden just beneath the leaf, at the lowest joint, and that look very much like flax seeds, are the resting stage of the insect. During August and early September these change into dusky little two-winged flies, resembling closely a mosquito, but not one quarter so large. The flies lay their eggs on the leaves of young plants and the maggots that hatch from these work their way down the leaf to the crown, where they suck the juices out of the plants, and ultimately, if very numerous, cause them to turn a sickly light color. Sometimes they become full grown and change into the flax-seed stage before winter, but in spring, when the warm weather has well started, another brood of flies emerges and lays eggs on the lower leaves. The maggots from these work their way down between the leaf and the stem and feed here upon the juices of the plant. Very often maggots are imbedded in the stalk right at the ground, though the great numbers are just above the first or second joint, concealed by the base of the leaf. The feeding done causes the plants to become weakened, and they either break off at the ground or fall over at the infested joint. The grain in fields that are attacked is often killed and staunted from lack of food, especially if several larvae had fed in a single stem, as is usually the case in a badly-infested field. If, however, only one is present, the head may mature fairly well. The larvae, or maggots, of this brood become full grown and change into the flax-seed or pupal stage a little before the grain is ripe.

The following methods of control should be practiced:

1. Plough down infested stubble to a depth of five or six inches as soon as the crop is off and then work the soil to firm it. This will bury the pupae and prevent the flies from emerging; for it has been found that they cannot emerge through three or four inches of well-firmed soil, though many would get up if the soil were not firmed. Very few pupae are carried with the grain into the barn, so that there is not much danger from these.

2. If the stubble cannot be ploughed as above, run a cultivator over it to loosen the surface and hasten the germination of any fallen seed. The flies will readily lay their eggs in these volunteer plants and then by ploughing the field in late September or in October the insects will be killed.

3. Use only good, plump grain that will germinate well, and have the seed bed for the wheat well prepared so that when the grain is sown it will have every opportunity to make a rapid, vigorous growth; for vigorous plants resist the injury better than weak plants.

4. Sow as late as experience shows is safe for the district, without running too great a risk of the plants not being sufficiently advanced to winter well. Late sowing is almost always a great help; because the insects do not come up through the soil until the flies have disappeared. Of course, such fields are subject to spring attacks, but it stands to reason that if they escape the fall attack they will have a much better chance to be only lightly attacked in the spring and thus give a better crop.

It is strongly urged that farmers follow the above suggestions this year, as it is quite probable that the Hessian Fly will, otherwise, do much damage next year.—L. Caesar, Provincial Entomologist of Ontario.

Appearances Count.

Paint does not make the barn any more than clothes make the man. A well-painted, well-painted, neat outbuildings are highly good evidence that the owner is efficient and prosperous. Appearances do count.

A Welcomed Shortage.

Southern Ontario is experiencing one shortage this year that is a welcomed relief of by the farmers. Here for many years has there been much an almost total absence of potato bugs. Many fields have been harvested with their early crop of potatoes in perfect condition, and this without their having been sprayed for either bugs or blight. Growers having later maturing crops are nevertheless taking precautions against the occurrence of late blight and bugs, as the belief is now generally established, that potato foliage should be kept in good shape until digging time.

Chicken That.

It is not too early to begin milk feeding surplus cockerels for market.

Look over the houses now and need repairs, and get it done if possible.

NEW SHORT CAPES

Latest Styles in Outer Garment Reach to Waistline.

Attractive Model Pulls About Figure; Shorter Design for Girls; Headgear Is Colorful.

Capes have by no means disappeared off the face of the earth. In fact, their numbers have increased astonishingly, according to a New York fashion authority. The shorter capes are the newest idea of a well-worker scheme—capes that reach the waist line or just a little below, and then are so constructed that they pull about the figure, forming a tight little place in the middle of the back, from which lines of draping emerge. These shorter capelets are particularly smart for the younger people. One would never suspect a cape of being surprisingly youthful, and yet these abbreviated affairs are certainly that. They are made, too, in fur, loose enough to be thrown back so that they will not become burdensome on warmer days. The cape, indeed, outside of the little animal neckpiece, is the fur idea of the moment. Many are the variations in style that have sprung into the popular market during the last few weeks.

The hats that are most numerous along the avenue are bright and spectacular in their coloring. There seems to be a decided leaning toward very bright and sparkling hats worn with coats or dresses or suits that are low and decidedly dark in tone. There is no happier combination. It is no wonder, that, especially in the springtime, women lean to bright colored hats. They make the streets look as though there was some reason for gayety and gaiety and brightness. Of course, the green hat in the jade shades is the thing of the moment for those who can wear that color. And it is a color that is not easily adapted to those colorings does not exactly suit it. But then there are red hats—coloring to suit every type of complexion—and the woman who has not at least one of these bright turbans is no happier than she is running.

The hats, as never before, tend toward a tilt off the face. For many years we had the hats with slightly turned down brims. Now we have swung to extremes in the other direction, nothing seems right on the head unless it turns directly away from the face. "Tams" and three-cornered hats turning away from the forehead hold the lead.

MILADY GOES IN FOR ACCESSORIES

Craze for Spending Money Now Has Firm Grip on the American Women.

EXTREME THINGS ARE LIKED

Prevailing Mania for Ornamentation Demands Most Costly Decorations and Nothing Is Too Bizarre or Fantastic.

The accessories of dress play no small part in the fashions of the moment. Along with the high cost of living a reckless expenditure of money for every detail of a woman's toilette has developed. One would think observes a prominent fashion writer, that money had no value whatever in the eyes of the world and that woman's supreme desire was the possession of everything that is beautiful and flattering, regardless of cost.

This craze, as it were, for spending money is psychological. It is commodities that the world lacks now and not money. Therefore, the value of all material things is enhanced in the eyes of the prospective purchaser. There is an avarice for the possession of articles of adornment rather than for money.

Many of the most reckless spenders are those who before the war did not have great fortunes. Money has come easily and it goes quickly. This is the woman will pay as much today for some dainty nonessential accessory of the toilette as she paid yesterday for a basic necessity. Apparently, she does not care that her veil costs as much as her hat, her purse as much as her dress, her fan as much as a coat and her hair ornaments as much as she once spent for real jewels.

Nothing Too Extreme.

No evening toilette is complete without some form of headdress or hair ornament, and nothing seems too extreme or fantastic to find favor. The hair is dressed very simply and close to the head. All extravagance of outline is given, therefore, by ornaments or garnitures of the most striking sort.

The interest in Spanish fashions manifests itself markedly in the high back Spanish comb, delicately carved and set with real or imitation jewels and sometimes with the high open back holding a panel of priceless lace.

There are also Egyptian hair ornaments of Egyptian and Greek types. In fact, almost every source of inspiration has been drawn upon to provide designs. The antennae of the butterfly are worked out in fine gold wires springing from a jeweled pend ant adorning the forehead.

Headdress Consisting of a Jewel Forehead Band and Pendant From Which Spring Fine Gold Wires. Two Carved and Jeweled Combs.

Even the crude art of the American Indian has been resorted to in this mad rush for ornamentation. Like the wife of an oldtime Indian chief, the woman of today wears headdresses of dyed feathers and necklaces of wood en beads. To keep the latter from being inexpensive a costly ornament of some sort, such as a piece of carved jade with a brilliant pendant, is at tached.

Tortoise Shell Vogue.

The new purses are either ample sacks, which serve for both day and evening affairs, or small, flat effects; the latter are reserved for occasions where one does not need a commodious handbag.

All the tortoise shell procurable has not been used for combs; it plays no small part in the new purses. In those which are of the small variety, like oldtime card cases, the shell is combined with leather, one side being of shell and the other of suede. A purse made in this manner has the inside divided into two compartments; one of suede is used for money, while the other, of white kid, is intended for trinkets or jewels.

A new bag is of pale gray doeskin mounted on a tortoise shell frame, the shell clasp being in the form of a spread fan. The handle or pendant for opening the purse is also of shell.

Raspberry Red Seal.

A distinctly new vanity case is of carved ivory. The plaques forming the body of the case are of ivory mounted in a gold frame and the bellows are of gray doeskin. The monogram is of Japanese character carved and picked out in black.

A fascinating little vanity case is made of raspberry red seal in oblong design with slightly rounding corners. The handle consists of four straps ending in a silver medallion inserted with Italian mosaic. On the outside of the case is a handkerchief pocket. Cases of this sort should carry the initial of the owner in silver or gold, according to the mountings of the purse.

Flat folded purses of the pillbook form are receiving considerable attention. These are quite different from the usual commonplace leather ones. They are developed both in leather and in satin and are composed of rare needlework tapestry which are often tiny bits cut from historic pieces torn apart in the devastation of the war.

Carried on Brace'ets.

When silk is used for the flat bags it is of rather heavier grade than the soft, the softer silks being reserved for those of the puffy type.

Gallilith, dyed in all colors, is used on bags. It takes the form of bracelets, dangling ornaments, chains, tops and cuplike bottoms of bags, to which silk tops are attached. This is a good way to introduce a bit of color into a costume, and at the same time a most expensive gallilith bag is handled long, which, beautiful in color, is quite expensive.

A bag on which gallilith is used is in melon shape, with the gallilith hoop from just described and silk pouch top gathered by a drawstring. There is a cap of the gallilith with holes in the top, through which the drawstring slips. The cap is pushed down to form a cover for the top of the bag. Even the tassels of the new bags are carried on bracelets. It may be just a bright colored gallilith bracelet or one of solid gold, or even of platinum set with precious stones. This fash ion of using bracelets for purposes an excellent opportunity for introducing costly effects in bags. This, unfortunately, seem to be one of the present-day demands.

Before passing from the subject of bracelets a description of a new novelty gallilith bracelet in bright coral color may be interesting. It is made in small rectangular pieces about 1 inch long and half an inch wide. Holes are pierced in the gallilith and through them very narrow elastic is run to make the bracelet pliable, so that it will fit any part of the arm. In these bracelets we see the return of a fashion of our grandmothers' days.

Chiffon for Tunic Blouse.

Chiffon is effective for the tunic blouse, and many of these are shown in the smart shops. Most of them are heavily embroidered with seed beads either in an all-over pattern or in bands of trimming applied at the usual places. A blouse of this character must be exceedingly well made in order to show to its best advantage.

We have through our water rates already paid for the waterworks, but do not own it. Why let another twenty years go by and still be in the same position?

Mr. Geo. W. Shibley, Mr. Bailey Hamm and Miss. Cowan extend grateful thanks to friends and neighbors for their unlimited kindness in their recent bereavement.

Commencing October 1, The Ontario Reformer will publish three issues a week, on Tuesday and Thursday as at present and also on Saturday. The Reformer commenced publication just a year ago as a semi-weekly, having been a weekly newspaper for forty-eight years.

"Ask and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full," John 16 24; "Giving thanks unto the Father, who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the Kingdom of his dear Son," Col. 1, 12, 13; "Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might," Eph. 6-10.

"That having all things done,
And all your conflicts past,
Ye may overcome through Christ alone,
And perfect stand at last."

A BIBLE LOVER.

It has been suggested by Co. Clerk Wilson that the guns (German Trophies) received from the Militia Defence Department, one by the county and other by the town, be placed in front of the Armouries, one on each side of the main entrance sites apparently provided for such military displays, thus centralizing in military matters. We invite expressions of opinion from others.

St. Mary Magdalene's church presented a very attractive appearance on Sunday with its tasteful decorations of the flowers and fruits of earth. It was the occasion of the annual Harvest Festival, and large congregations were present to render their thanksgiving. Rev. W. H. Towle, a polished and eloquent speaker, preached at both services. The choir was in specially good form and the music worthy of the occasion.

An Extraordinary Wound.

An extraordinary illustration of how hard to kill are some men, is given in the London Lancet, by Dr. H. J. B. Fry. A British soldier was hit by a German bullet on the left side of the abdomen. The bullet gouged the surface of the external iliac artery, penetrated the internal iliac vein, passed up this to the heart, passed through the heart and lodged in the left branch of the pulmonary artery. An X-ray photograph did not show it; there was no pain near the heart, but the left leg became gangrenous from its circulation being cut off, and was amputated two days after the wound was received. Finally the patient went into shock and died. He had survived this extraordinary wound a whole month.

Fabrics Named for Cities.

The origin of the names of popular fabrics is even more interesting than the tracing to third lingual roots of ordinary words.

About the year 1329 the woollen trade of England become located at Worsted, about 15 miles from Norwich, and it was at this place that the manufacture of the twisted double thread woollen, afterward called worsted, was first made, if not invented.

Linsey-wolsey was first made at Linsey, and was for a long time a very popular fabric.

Kerseymere takes its name from the village of Kersey, and the mere close by it, in the county of Suffolk.

We have to thank Gaza, in Palestine, the gates of which Samson carried away, for gaza or gauze. Gaza means "treasure." Voltaire, wishing to describe some intellectual but dressy woman, said "She is an eagle in a cage of gauze."

Muslin owes its name to Mossoul, a fortified town in Turkey in Asia.

Tulle obtains its name from that of a city in the south of France. Travelers by rail in Brittany often glide past Guingamp without remembering that it was here that was first produced that useful fabric, gingham.

Damask derives its name from the city of Damascus; calico from Calicut, a town in India formerly celebrated for its cotton cloth, where also calico was printed; cambric from Cambray, a town in Flanders, where is was first made, and tweed from a fabric worn by fishermen upon the river Tweed.

Potash Deposits In Sicily.

Immense deposits of potash have just been discovered in the Province of Caltanisetta, Sicily. Preliminary investigations indicate that these are the richest in the world.

EXHIBIT OF NEWEST FALL FASHIONS IN HATS IS NOW TAKING PLACE IN OUR MILLINERY DEPARTMENTS

We strongly urge our patrons to visit our millinery show rooms and to make their selections at a date as early as possible.

These are days when autumn hats are selling freely and if one must buy, early choosing offers widest assortments.

To decribe each and every hat would take much space and possibly you wouldn't have time to read, thus it behooves you to visit our millinery department, to view at your leisure, to try on, to compare, to note the ways in which our millinery excels. Our millinery has been chosen from the stocks of the foremost millinery creators in Canada. These people go far afield for styles and ideas—thus any hat chosen at Robinson's is essentially correct in style—color—quality and price.
